It is our belief that, at common law, an adult may assume any surname by using such name and becoming known by it, for the use of a "surname" is a convention rather than a legal necessity, and the "surname" is never formally bestowed on a "person" but acquired by the living man or man by reputation, and, as such, at common law, an adult may assume any "surname" by using such name and becoming known by it, the "surname" not being a matter of law but a matter of repute;
